Description

The rosehip is a wild shrub of the rosaceae family. It is cultivated mainly in the United Kingdom, although the discovery of its properties was made during research at the University of Concepción, in Chile, during the 1980s. The vegetable oil is obtained by cold pressing of the seeds.

Vitaroms Rosehip vegetable oil is obtained by first cold pressing the mature seeds of canine rose. This ensures that all its components remain intact, thus providing great benefits to the body. It contains 80% of polyunsaturated fatty acids, which stimulate the natural regeneration of the skin. The daily application of this oil will provide the necessary nutrients to maintain a young and healthy skin.
